In the Birmingham Public Library’s 126 year history, 2012 might be described as transformative. On the heels of severe budget and staff cuts implemented over the past three years, BPL worked to renew attention and support for the library’s basic programming while planning for substantial special projects to be realized in the coming years.

In August, BPL launched a media campaign with the help of Big Communications and Six Branding and Design to remind Birmingham citizens about the library’s meaning to the community. The campaign introduced a new, contemporary logo; placed high quality spots and advertisements featuring Olympian Vonetta Flowers on local television and in print media; and increased the library’s presence on social media sites including Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest, YouTube, and Instagram. One of the most delightful surprises of 2012 came with BPL staff winning the Alabama’s Brightest Company Trivia Contest—at both the local and the state levels. The combined knowledge of our team of librarians garnered a total of $20,000 in prize money for the media campaign and an abundant sense of pride among employees and the public.

Simultaneously, BPL introduced a grass roots campaign to encourage community residents to advocate on behalf of the library before Birmingham’s City Council, appealing to our local officials to reverse the severe budget cuts of the last two years. Councilmen and women heard library supporters’ persuasive voices and not only halted further cuts to our materials budget, but raised the budget slightly over last year.

While protecting the library’s fundamental services—books, magazines, DVDs, and other resources—BPL began a multi-year project to renovate the Central Library’s East Building and Linn Henley Research Library. A conceptual design completed in 2010 illustrates great possibilities for re-envisioned spaces, upgraded systems, and more accessible facilities that reflect how city residents use their public library in the 21st century. The renovation will provide more spaces for programming, dedicated areas for children and teens, and larger storage and reading areas for special collections. The City of Birmingham has agreed to support this important project by allocating $460,000 to develop the design, which should be complete near the end of 2013.

Behind these strategic initiatives are BPL’s governing and support boards: a governing Board of Trustees; the Friends of BPL that work on advocacy and volunteerism; BPL’s Foundation Board which is the library’s philanthropic arm; and a brand new BPL Young Professionals group that brings the talent of 40 of Birmingham’s emerging leaders to the library. With each of these boards focusing on different aspects of BPL’s programs and services, the library becomes a stronger organization that touches each part of the city and county.

All of these ambitious and visible initiatives mean very little without the programs and services that are implemented in our 19 locations every day: computer classes, lectures and storytelling, free Wi-Fi, after school activities, reading initiatives, special performances, and the hundreds of programs listed in the appendices in this report.

The work of our 302 staff members is our greatest resource, resulting in the creative programming that serves individuals of all ages in the neighborhoods where they live and work. Whether through large initiatives or daily programming, BPL’s work is transformative on an individual and community level.

Please, find attached to this report a comprehensive list of our grants, awards, and special projects for this past year, which complement and enhance the library’s most basic function—to provide access to information through books, magazines, newspapers, databases, DVDs, CDs, the Internet and more to meet the needs of citizens of Birmingham.
